What's been learned?

- Configuration for UK (=low risk?) trips is too detailed
- Configuration for fieldwork (=high risk and/or complex) trips is not detailed enough
- Introduction of Foresight is a significant change for some departments, but a more natural development for others
- Intelligence provided by Peregrine does not match individuals' perceptions of risk.
- Some departments understand the principles of travel risk management well, others have a more limited understanding.

Next steps

- Health & Safety Executive Committee consideration of what level of risk assessment is required for UK trips – 20 December
- Reconfiguration of trip types, including UK and the Fieldwork templates, based on feedback from pilot departments
- Finalise student access to Foresight
- Mini communications campaign in Lent Term to address heads of department and academic colleagues
- Continue with roll out at a steady pace

Helping with implementation

- Individual conversations with each department to understand:
 1. Nature and amount of travel undertaken
 2. How well understood is the need for risk assessments and level of compliance
 3. Processes used at the moment – Safety Office forms, own forms, links with ethics approval, etc
 4. Talk through the issues learned from the pilot departments
 5. Gauge level of change introducing Foresight represents
 6. Develop rough plan for implementation based on department's ways of working, faculty meeting schedule etc.
